

What's Your One Thing?

For the first time, WSU faculty and staff are invited to join the "One Thing Challenge," a two-week pledge to do one thing to improve the environment.

The name One Thing Challenge comes from a friendly, pre-Apple Cup competition between residence hall students at WSU and UW who vie to see who can be most sustainable. WSU has claimed the title four of six years. Organized by residence hall staff on the Sustainability Committee, participants register online and pledge to make changes for a two-week period in one or more categories.

This year marks the first time all students, faculty, and staff are also invited to participate, in keeping with themes in this year's Common Reading book — Garbology: Our Dirty Love Affair with Trash, by Edward Humes. For more information, visit CommonReading.wsu.edu.

--Karen Weathermon and Susan Poch
Co-directors, Common Reading Program
Office of Undergraduate Education

"I will be interested to see how students connect Garbology to invoke change that could fundamentally alter our behavior as an institution. What policies and practices might we institute to reduce waste?"

-- Daniel J. Bernardo, Ph.D.
WSU Provost, Executive Vice President

Sign up for the
One Thing Challenge today.

WSU's One Thing
Challenge
Nov. 12-24, 2014

Office of

Undergraduate Education

WASHINGTON STATE UNIVERSITY