What is Local Food?

We define “local” as food that is grown, caught, raised, or made in Washington State. However, more importantly, “local” should represent an area where you can feasibly “know your farmer.” With an abundance of food available in our state, local food is more than just about measuring miles—it’s about building connections with farmers, fishermen, and food producers who are integral parts of our communities.

<https://eatlocalfirst.org/>

Eat Local First is a trusted resource for finding local farms and identifying restaurants, markets, and food businesses that source from local producers. Launched in 2011 by Sustainable Connections' Food & Farming Program, the Eat Local First campaign encourages both residents and visitors in Northwest Washington to prioritize local food.

Eat Local First Washington:

- Support Local Farmers: Buy directly from farmers, markets, and local food producers.
- Fresh, Sustainable Food: Enjoy food that’s fresher, healthier, and grown sustainably.
- Strengthen Your Community: Help boost the local economy and reduce environmental impacts.
- Discover Local Flavors: Explore seasonal produce and unique local food products.
